Director General of ISESCO to take part in 17th International Summit on Transnational Crime, Geneva

The Director General of the Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (ISESCO), Dr Abdulaziz Othman Altwaijri, is taking part in the 17th annual session of the International Summit on Transnational Crime, convened by Crans Montana Forum in Geneva from 14 through 16 October 2015.

He will give a speech at the opening session dedicated to the issue of “Global Security and Terror Threats”, in the presence of the President of the Republic of Macedonia and a constellation of ministers, intellectuals and senior personalities from the realms of politics, business and media. He will also co-chair a plenary session themed “Today’s migrations in the Mediterranean represent a major threat for Europe and the region” with United Nations Under Secretary General Philippe Douste-Blazy.

In addition, the Director General of ISESCO will chair a parallel session on “Extremism and radicalization: two new comers threatening our societies are reshaping the role of the state, the society and the family itself” with as guest of honor the First Lady of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, Mrs Aisha Muhammadu Buhari.

The Summit will have plenary sessions on critical topics related to global security and terror threats, security challenges in the energy sector and transport, and role of corruption and economic crime as a breeding ground for terror.

The closing session will feature a ceremony both for the presentation of the Forum’s annual award and for the nomination of the new leaders for tomorrow 2015.
