Migration crisis is the focus of today's session of the two-day Crans Montana Forum in Geneva, where as a special guest participates President Gjorge Ivanov, who will address the topic "The Western Balkans as new route for migrants to the West", reported MIA.

On this special session of the forum will address the Montenegrin President Filip Vujanovich and mayors of mayors of the Italian cities Lampedusa and Palermo, which are expected to answer the question whether today's migrant crisis poses serious threat to Europe and the region despite the humanitarian tragedies and whether the focus is on the real problems. Also are announced other current and former senior officials in the Balkan region, the UN and other organizations.

During the visit to Switzerland, President Ivanov will meet with the High Commissioner for Human Rights Council Zeid Ra'ad Al-Hussein.

Ivanov, yesterday addressed the opening of the Crans Montana Forum on global security threats and terrorism, international and regional cooperation and conflict prevention as well as response to the question about threats to international business. He met with the Director General of the United Nations in Geneva, Michael Miller, and visited the School of Diplomacy and International Relations in Geneva.
